13 THINGS YOU SHOULD KNOW ABOUT TRAVELING TO BOULDER

from Lonely Planet.com

Boulder sits at 5328 feet above sea level – not the highest elevation in Colorado, but high enough that some travelers coming from sea level experience the effects of altitude sickness. If you have headaches, nausea, fatigue or trouble sleeping during your trip, these symptoms might be a result of pressure and oxygen differences. Some ways to avoid altitude sickness are staying hydrated, drinking alcohol in moderation and avoiding salty foods – all of which can also help you adjust to Colorado’s dry climate.

MUST-SEE BOULDER from Boulder Colorado USA.com

The brick-paved Pearl Street is Boulder’s heart and soul — a central gathering place where locals and visitors alike come to stroll and shop among the historic storefronts, dine at buzzed-about restaurants, sip coffee, throw back a microbrew or simply people-watch. If you do only one thing in Boulder, walking this pedestrian mall should probably be it.
